HC 481 - Improving Access to Work for Disabled People

2014-12-19 Great Britain. Parliament. House of Commons. Work and Pensions Committee Access to Work (AtW) is an important element of specialist employment support for disabled people. It is unique in providing help to people already in, or about to start, mainstream work. It has the potential to be an extremely effective model, helping to address the substantial gap between the employment rate for disabled people and that of the rest of the population. Where it works well, it transforms the lives of disabled people, many of whom would be unable to work without it. There is strong evidence that AtW currently supports only a minority of disabled people whom it might benefit. There is a misperception that the sole purpose of AtW is to provide physical aids, equipment and transport for people with sensory impairments and physical disabilities; consequently relatively few people with other types of disability, and different support needs, currently use the programme. In scaling up the programme DWP needs to address this imbalance. Its priority should be supporting a much greater number of people with mental health problems, and intellectual, cognitive and developmental impairments, including learning disabilities and autism spectrum disorders. AtW's focus should remain on removing barriers to employment for the full range of disabled people who can benefit from it. DWP should make a strong and evidence-based case to HM Treasury for substantial additional funding for AtW and then aim to increase take-up through much more high profile marketing, and proactive promotion of AtW, including through Jobcentre Plus Work Coaches and contracted employment services providers.

The publication “Analyzing Casual Conversation” by Suzanne Eggins and Diana Slade, originally released in 1997, creates a methodical model for the examination and portrayal of casual conversation in English. The authors argue that despite its at times aimless appearance and ostensibly unstructured substance, casual conversation is a highly structured task and performs a vital function in the social building of reality. The publication works through authentic examples of casual conversations involving participants diverging in age, gender, ethnicity, and socio-economic class<sup>12</sup>. Deriving on understandings from sociology, linguistics, and critical semiotics, the work provides readers with the analytical skills to describe the levels of structure and critical interpretive models to clarify the ‘social work’ that happens on through chat.
